I have attended all but 2 of our reunions. My daughter was scheduled to donate a kidney to a co worker just before the reunion...as things turned out last minute antibodies canceled two operations and now it is scheduled for next Wednesday

Too far to travel for something in which I have little interest.
i chose not to attend. Kind of don't like the way Harvard is turning out. I see it as a way station on way to big money on Wall Street. For example 2 despicable people are associated with H Robert Rubin and Larry Summers. Not proud to be associated.
Husband had open heart surgery 4/14 at MGH and that is a long , arduous 6 week recovery process. Did attend the Class 60 Radcliffe dinner at the St Botolphe's Club and was delighted to see all the Radcliffe 60 classmates there.
too much travel already in the past year.
Out of concern for Earth, I no longer travel by air.
I had just taken on a new job. I have not and have no plans to retire. Some of us have to keep working to support the Social Security payments to all those layabouts in the Class of '60
55 seems like a insignificant number for a reunion, I will try to make the 60th.
I came for Divest Harvard and felt that was enough. The 25th was great but the 40th was very self centered and 50th seemed lavish relative to the state of the world
It is difficult to travel from Walla Walla, WA to Cambridge. No friends were attending.
Too far away to make it worth while

8. Please explain your decision regarding a voluntary remittance to the Class Report.

Text Response

I always look forward to receiving the Class Report and save past reports.

I realize such reports cost money

It is an expensive book to put together and I feel I should contribute to it since I am receiving a copy.

I look forward with anticipation to the Class Report. As the years have passed, the reports have become more honest and revealing. It is far better than reading fiction.

Just wanted to share the cost.

can't remember if I sent anything...

Special financial pressures at this time.

I have degrees from several worthy institutions. Most of them spend a lot less money on sports and shiny buildings than Harvard. They get what I have to give.

Hope it helped to defray the cost of putting it all together

It really wasn't presented as "Voluntary" but in any case, one knows the work and costs involved - only fair.

See the answer to the first question of this section -- I value the report highly.

I am comfortable in paying for a copy of a booklet or book that I can refer to and if the cost allows others who may be on a restricted income to have a free or lower cost one that's OK. should help bear the cost.

I can find no record of having given and I don't remember my thinking at the time.

It seemed appropriate.

I usually support the Woman's center each year.

I did not believe it was necessary, we try to channel charitable and social contributions to needy organizations.

I get the report, read and refer to it, and don't throw it away, so I ought to pay my share.

These are very valuable not only to class members but for many other purposes.

no interest

I wanted to participate in this Harvard/class effort.

Funds availability

I wanted to do my share.

I'm sure I meant to but not sure I did.

My voluntary remittance will be forthcoming

Have contributed to every report in the past 55 years and simply didn't get around to it this time.

I know some very dear classmates who are not well-off. I thought sending a little extra would help make sure they received their reports as well.

Creating books costs money. If you want a hardcopy, it's only fair to contribute.

Sense of obligation

There are costs associated with publishing the Class Report and since I do like to read about the accomplishments of our class, I should be willing to pay my part of the cost.

We give money to environmental and political groups.

I've stopped sending money anywhere mostly (except for Maine organic Farmers and Gardeners Association and our local community radio), but I never did send much money anyway so it's no great loss

I thought that I should pay my way for something I knew I would enjoy.

Can't remember whether I made a remittance or not. I meant to. The suggested remittance seems a bit high.

I value receiving the Report, and am willing to financially support its publication.

Gave amount requested.
 Harvard is not invested some money wisely should spend more wisely
 We are both Class of 1960. You sent us two books, when one would do, but we recognized our obligation.
 Appreciation for the extensive work by classmates to make the 60th a success. Wish to include my stories of recent years.
 My decision was based on my sense of stewardship and personal responsibility.
 Fairness
 This information is good and always interesting.
 Encouraged by classmate help make it affordable for all.
 I was in hospital over two months this winter-spring, most of the time unable to attend to anything. Most mail I simply disregarded.
 Want to help cover costs others may not be able to covet
 I do not give to Harvard primarily because it already has so much money. So I give something for a specific chore undertaken by classmates unrecompensed by the university.
 value received merits exchange of value
 I enjoy reading what classmates are doing and how they are thinking about the age we are. I save the class reports and, from time to time, look back over how people's lives and view of their lives have changed (or not) over time. for this reason, I do especially value the print reports, despite their expense. I also find it interesting to try to summarize my own experience during the interim between reports.
 I just felt like writing.
 I didn't realize that I would get the Class Report and didn't think I needed it. When it came, I threw it out because I couldn't find any classmates. At Radcliffe Day I realized that Radcliffe was at the end and I did borrow a book to look up a few people. My mistake.
 Didn't get around to it.
 I tend to stay in touch with friends as a matter of course. The Class Report is a back-up.
 Not much interestt.
 Not important to me
 I felt it was important to support it
